New country. New culture. New dog. Same confused American.

Sold out across five countries — Germany, Denmark, Austria, Switzerland and Luxembourg. Now Stuttgart, one night only.

Fri 15 Jan · Doors 20:00 · From 13€ going up to 25€ at the door

From a small town in America to a Berlin apartment with a German wife and a very needy dog, this is a personal, punchy show about getting lost — literally and emotionally — in a new country. No German, no volume control, no national pride.

Pat Moore digs into the strange, funny and occasionally humiliating business of being an American trying to adapt to life in Germany. Cross-cultural relationships. Bureaucracy. The textile-free wellness centre. Dog-related trauma.

It's for anyone who's ever moved abroad, dated across cultures, or wanted a personal apology from an American.

🗓️ Friday 15 January 2027

Doors 20:00 · Show 20:30 · A straight-through 75-minute show, no interval

Seating is first come, first served — arrive early for the good seats

📍 Theater am Olgaeck, Charlottenstraße 44, 70182 Stuttgart

Full Bar will be available the whole night. Performed entirely in English.

🎟️ Early Bird 13€ (limited) · Student 15€ · Groups of 4+ 15€ each · Regular 18€ · Door 25€

About the comedian

Pat Moore is an American stand-up comedian based in Berlin. His previous solo show, MAMAS' BOY ~ Lesbian Son Comedy Hour, toured 28 European cities. He's an alumnus of the San Francisco Comedy Competition, a finalist of the Berlin New Standup Awards, and has performed for Don't Tell Comedy.

His comedy is storytelling-forward, self-deprecating, and deeply confused — just like he is. He lives in Berlin with his German wife and a suspiciously photogenic dog.

Instagram: @patmoorecomedy Youtube: @patmoorecomedy

🎧 Check out his podcast The Show Must Go Wrong | Or listen on Spotify